Understanding the Cost of Trading Allocated Gold

January 16, 2016

Executive Summary:

While gold has been a store of wealth for thousands of years, it received renewed attention following the financial crisis, as confidence in the banking system was shaken. If a bank were to file for bankruptcy, electronically stored balances of cash and securities could get caught up in the proceedings, leaving them unavailable to their owner. With allocated physical gold, however, the account holder can pick up their bars from the shuttered bank and move them elsewhere.

This feeling of safety, along with central bank policy, drove the price of gold up to historic levels, despite the implicit and explicit costs that make investing in gold—whether as an inflation hedge or for its diversifying effects—more costly than other financial instruments. Gold has a negative cost of carry (gold bars pay no interest), and the need to store and protect this hard asset creates costs for the buyer that go beyond the market-driven bid-ask spread. But while prices kept rising, none of that mattered.

Today, with prices coming back down to earth, trading costs are more important than ever. Depending on the market participant, trading costs for allocated gold include fees for allocation, transportation (if required), and custody.

Methodology:

In October 2015, Greenwich Associates conducted telephone interviews regarding the U.S. gold market. Study participants included major banks, prime brokers, fund managers, leading trading firms, and exchanges.

The data contained in the Document is based upon a particular bank's scope, which reflects a bank's data submission, business structure, and sales revenue Reporting methodology. As a result, any data contained in the Document may not be directly comparable to data presented to another bank. For franchise benchmarking, Crisil Coalition Greenwich has implemented equal ranking logic on aggregate results i.e., when sales revenues are within 5% of at least one competitor ahead, a tie is shown and designated by = (where actual ranks are shown). Entity level data has no equal ranking logic implemented and therefore, on occasion, the differences between rank bands can be very close mathematically.

The data in this Document may reflect the views reported to Crisil Coalition Greenwich by the research participants. Interviewees may be asked about their use of and demand for financial products and services and about investment practices in relevant financial markets. Crisil Coalition Greenwich compiles the data received, conducts statistical analysis and reviews for presentation purposes to produce the final results.
